BARRY LYNDON (12A)

An epic tale of an Irish rogue whose ambition and opportunism propel him from a humble farm to the battlefields of the Seven Years' War and the opulent parlours of 18th-century high society. Born from the ashes of his abandoned Napoleon project, Stanley Kubrick redefined the historical drama with this sardonic exploration of a ruthless aristocracy, adapted from William Makepeace Thackeray's novel.

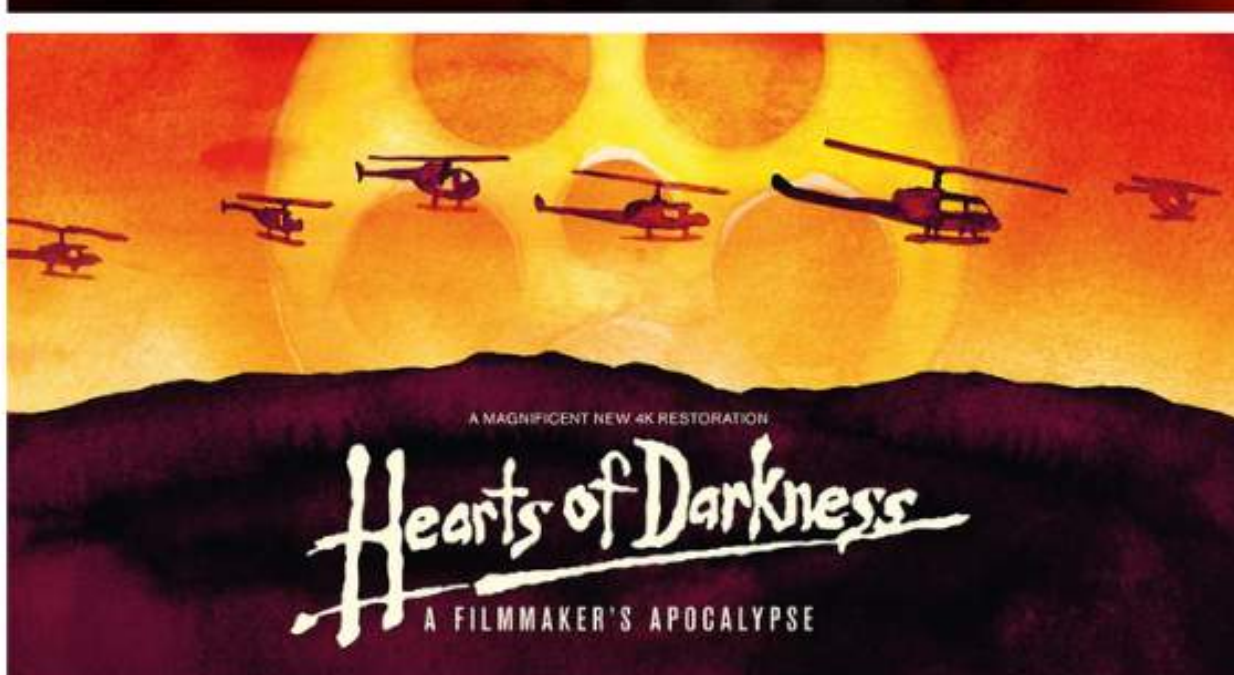

BOGANCLOCH (U)

Bogancloch is where modern-day hermit Jake Williams lives, nestled in one of Scotland's vast highland forests. His daily life is captured on different stocks of 16mm film by filmmaker and artist Ben Rivers. A follow-up to Rivers' previous portrait of Jake, Two Years at Sea, his latest, utterly mesmerising work also stands on its own - a dreamlike meditation on nature, solitude, the power of music and one individual's singular approach to life.

HEARTS OF DARKNESS: A FILMMAKER'S APOCALYPSE (15) - A 4K RESTORATION

Francis Ford Coppola began to film 'Apocalypse Now' in February 1976. After 238 days in the jungle, filming was complete and millions of dollars had been spent (Marlon Brando was on set for three weeks at a million dollars a week). Actors had been replaced (Harvey Keitel by Martin Sheen). They had all gone a bit insane (according to Coppola) and the whole thing was documented on film by his wife, Eleanor.
